Evidentiary Implications of Technology in the Courtroom

This two-hour program will cover evidentiary implications of technology in the courtroom. Attendees will hear seasoned Oregon attorneys Ralph Spooner and Tim Williams discuss a variety of issues increasingly encountered by litigators, including:

- the mechanics of marking and admitting digital exhibits how to electronically display exhibits procedure for electronic exhibits going to jury effectively using an electronic presentation during opening and closing

Ralph is an experienced trial attorney with Spooner & Much. He defends clients in various types of cases, including complex institutional litigation, class actions, construction defects, liquor liability, premises liability, automobile accidents, employment, bad faith, and product liability. Tim is an established trial attorney with Dwyer Williams Potter. He specializes in representing plaintiffs and has tried many personal injury cases, including auto accident, premises liability, and semi-truck accident cases.
